

(Above) Dr. Paul Adamthwaite, executive director of the Naval Marine Archive located in Picton, stands among the many resources of the establishment. "We're rich here in Lake Ontario in shipwrecks, particularly this part of Lake Ontario," said Adamthwaite.

Photo by Carla Antonio

(Left) Lino Trigatti shuffles around his house, which brings together a collection of wooden objects he handcrafted himself. Wooden model ships, airplanes, ducks, full-size canoes and other items can be found scattered around Trigatti's eccentric house.

Photo by Nakita Krucker

(Above) David Onley, former lieutenant-governor of Ontario, poses for a photo in his office at the University of Toronto Scarborough Campus on March 9. After leaving the vice-regal position in September 2014, Onley began teaching political science at the university. "There needs to be a 'Let's Just Talk' about all aspects of disability, to get away from the fears, from the stereotypes which tragically are still an integral part of our culture," he said.

Photo by Elaine Bombay

(Right) Jeremiah Brown is a Canadian rower who won the silver medal during the 2012 London Olympics as part of the men's eight crew for Canada.

Photo by Amanda Paulhus

